Cleveland Square was the setting for the May pole dance of the junior Y. W. C. A. girls Saturday afternoon, who entertained a very large crowd of people who had gathered to witness the performance. The pole, with its gay streamers, was in the center of the band stand, and around it the little girls, dreesed in white, waved their garlands of yellow and white flowers, and twined and braided the streamers. The children made a very pretty picture. Cleveland square proved an ideal setting for such an occasion, with the freshi spring greenness of the grass and shrubbery, the turquois olue of the skies and the deeper violet of the Guadalupe mountains in the background.

to cultivate as you do a broad A in speaking. Some people don't want to cultivate the A, and others don't want to be fidy, but mark my words, if you want to do either, so that it seems natural, begin when you are young.

A Principal Item.

Dress is one of the principal items of a woman's charm. It doesn't have to be expensive, but it must express her own femininity and essential daintiness. You can wear the prettiest dress in the world, but if you are not really dainty, somehow, that quality is going to show. The fact that you have on a new and fresh dress doesn't hide the lack of physical deanliness and refinement, and somewhere this lack is going to proclaim itself in the solled ruffle of a petticoat that drags or in a down trodden heel of a shoe, in hair that needs shampooing, and nails that need mani-of a shoe, in hair that needs sham-pooring, and nails that need mani-curing,

Most people think that being beautiful is an expensive process. That isn't so at all. Real beauty doesn't come out of shops, and while it means constant care and attention. It does not require spending of much money.

Neither does charm.

A woman does not have to wear a Paguin gown to appear absolutely charming in the eyes of her household. But she can't some to the breakfast table in our papers, or a frowsy head of bair even if she's wearing a dressing gown designed by a famous French cosumer and he attractice.
